This historic book may have numerous typos and missing text. Purchasers can download a free scanned copy of the original book (without typos) from the publisher. Not indexed. Not illustrated. 1898 Excerpt: ...this Snake, but it is thought to burrow in loose ground. The color of the Atractaspis is blackish-green above, shaded with orange-brown, and orange-buff below. It is a small Serpent, rarely measuring more than two feet in length. THE BATRACHIANS. FROGS AND TOADS. The Batrachians are separated from the true reptiles on account of their peculiar development, which gives them a strong likeness to the fishes, and affords a good ground for considering these animals to form a distinct order. On their extrusion from the egg, they bear no resemblance to their parents, but are in a kind of intermediate existence, closely analogous to the caterpillar or larval state of insects, and called by the same name. Like the fish, they exist wholly in the water, and breathe through gills instead of lungs, obtaining the needful oxygen from the water which washes the delicate gill-membranes. At this early period they have no external limbs, moving by the rapid vibration of the flat and fan-like tail with which they are supplied. While in this state, they are popularly called tadpoles, those of the frog sometimes bearing the provincial name of pollywogs. The skin of the Batrachians is not scaly, and in most instances is smooth and soft. Further peculiarities will be mentioned in connection with the different species. These creatures fall naturally into two sub-orders--the leaping or tail-less Batrachians, and the crawling Batrachians. The leaping Batrachians, comprising the frogs and toads, are familiar in almost all lands. The tongue plays an important part in separating the frogs and toads into groups; and in the first group the tongue is altogether absent, these creatures being, in consequence, called Aglossa, or tongueless Batrachians. The first of these creatures, the Xenopu...
