The hypotheses that teeth function like a concave-convex mill and that speech is an oral function for the most part form the main basis for the methods described and illustrated in this book. The problems of dealing successfully with cases of Major Clefts are examined in Part 1, and the principle of the sound-directing concave oro-pharyngeal extension within the Cleft is carefully explained. In Part 2 certain illustrated histories are given. Edentulous patients have been chosen for these case histories since the linking up of the provision of full upper dentures with complete oro-pharyngeal extensions has not previously been recorded in the literature and the palato-pharyngeal method is even less difficult for partial dentures than when the function of the lost teeth has to be restored at the same time.
