“...I am fond of telling the tale of the inventor of chess and his patron, the emperor of China. In response to the emperor’s offer of a reward for his new beloved game, the inventor asked for a single grain of rice on the first square, two on the second square, four on the third, and so on. The Emperor quickly granted this seemingly benign and humble request. One version of the story has the emperor going bankrupt as the 63 doublings ultimately totaled 18 million trillion grains of rice. At ten grains of rice per square inch, this requires rice fields covering twice the surface area of the Earth, oceans included. Another version of the story has the inventor losing his head.” -Ray Kurzweil We that live in the 21st century are beginning to experience the true nature of exponential development. Just the concept of exponential growth is strangely difficult for us to comprehend. If you aren’t very familiar with the concept, please look up a graph that illustrates it. On the graph you will see a line that slowly gets higher for a while. Then, once it starts to show significant growth, it quickly changes from a roughly horizontal line, to an almost completely vertical line. The human race is at that point where the line is just starting to climb significantly. The changes that we in the 21st century will see in our physical surroundings, our society, and our culture, will be more than ten times greater than the changes our grandparents witnessed. And the changes are just starting to speed up. The Industrial Revolution started this exponential cycle two hundred years ago. In a hundred years our development will be on that point of the graph where the line is almost completely vertical. While a single person can adjust to changes like these, groups of people, e.g. institutions, are very resistant to change. Resisting change, when change is inevitable, causes problems. We are just starting to witness these problems. This essay seeks to get people thinking about ways to address this issue. Carpe diem!
